CITY PREPARES FOR NOISY EXIT OF KING BOOZE

Preparations for the passing of the saloon in Washington, the history of the liquor traffic here, and word-pictures of the famous old bars that will pase into history on November 1, are treated by Ben F. Allen, Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, in the following dispatch sent to that paper today.

Part of the arrangements for a politic features.

Part of the arrangements for a poisy and what seems certain to be a more or less riotous Jeave-taking of boone is due to the fact that the people of the District of Columbia, unlike the people of Ohlo, who vote on the question of prohibition six days after the National Capital goes dry, had no voice in the passing of the liquor traffic. Washington goes dry, and the saloons are to pass into a thing of memories by act of Congress and without any reference of the question to the residents of the District of Columbia.

Bars, known and referred to by travelers in London and Paris, pass on into history. Here were places reputed to serve the finest of all mint juleps and an amazing cocktail, the recipe for which always was kept a strict secret. The shutters go up on these places which for long years extended hospitality to many of the great men of the nation.
